Lina Pinto-García is an interdisciplinary scholar with substantial training and experience in both natural and social sciences. She holds a PhD in Science, Technology and Society (a field also known as Science and Technology Studies or STS) from York University (Canada) and was a research fellow at Harvard's Science, Technology and Society Program in 2019.

Currently, she is the main researcher in the Diseased Landscapes project, a collaborative effort for which she secured funding from the British Academy in 2020. This project brings together interdisciplinary expertise from the UK and Colombia to ethnographically study how the nexus of agricultural extractivism and political conflict affects environmental and human health. In the scope of that project, Lina is a research affiliate of the Institute for Science, Innovation and Society (InSIS) at the University of Oxford (UK) and a part-time postdoctoral researcher at the Interdisciplinary Center for Development Studies (CIDER) at Universidad de los Andes (Bogotá, Colombia). She is also working on a book project that explores a vector-borne disease called leishmaniasis and its entanglements with the Colombian armed conflict.
